Adult Speech Pathology

Speech pathologists work with people facing challenges in communication, cognition or swallowing.

Communication involves a spectrum of skills including speaking, listening, hearing, understanding, reading, writing, thinking, using your voice, and social skills.

Our speech pathologists aim to help people feel more confident and connected to their community.

How can a speech pathologist help?

Our speech pathologists will work with you, your family and your healthcare team to identify your specific needs, create a personalised treatment plan and help you reach your health goals.

Our service may include assessments, individual or group therapy, counselling, and education for you and your family.

Speech pathologists can assist you to:

- communicate with others
- understand people
- remember what people say
- find the words to say

Speech pathology groups

We also run the Western Aphasia Group where people can practice communicating together in a safe and encouraging space.

People affected by aphasia and their caregivers can join the group regardless of where they live.
